DRIVEN CAPITAL COMMENCES WORK ON LYN SILVER PROJECT, YUKON

June 13, 2011 – Driven Capital Corp. (TSXV: DVV) (“Driven” or the “Company”) is pleased to advise that the 2011 work program has commenced on its Lyn silver project in the Yukon (the “Property”).

“We’re excited that the process of exploring and delineating silver mineralization on Lyn is underway,” commented Toma Sojonky, the Company’s chief executive officer.

Driven has entered into an exploration services contract with Aurora Geosciences Ltd. of Whitehorse (“Aurora”), which will carry out a three-phase work program consisting of prospecting, mapping, sampling, trenching and drilling through the autumn of 2011.

A crew including geologists and prospectors has been mobilized to prospect, geologically map and geochemically sample both the historic high-grade silver showings and the peripheral silver-lead-zinc mineralization along the Property’s northwest trending electromagnetic anomalies. A Niton gun will be used to estimate silver grades on-site in order to help determine controls on the highest grade silver mineralization in real time as mapping progresses, and to guide field interpretations. To accurately determine grade, all sampled surface mineralization will be analyzed in the assay lab.

In the latter half of the summer, Aurora intends to carry out phase 2 excavator trenching and shallow pack-sack drilling down-dip and along strike of the veins exposed at the surface in order to determine attitude, morphology and controls on mineralization.

Phase 3 exploration will consist of conventional diamond drilling to test known mineralized structures and stratigraphic horizons at deeper levels.

Geologist U. Peter Kurisoo, a Director of the Company, is the Qualified Person under National Instrument 43-101 responsible for the technical information in this news release.
